Your Gifts--
How to Buy Them Best

You want your gifts to look a little better than the money they cost. And so this store has brought its prices down to rock bottom—has bought more closely than ever it bought before—and has given you the full benefit of its savings.

You want your gifts to be a little different from the ordinary ones that everybody gives, and so this store has gone out of its way to pick up things here and there and everywhere that have some mark of distinction—that impress everyone right away as being different.

You want your gifts to come within the range of the amount you have allowed for Xmas shopping and, if possible, leave you a little over for the many unexpected needs of Xmas week. And so this store does not try to get a few cents more from you for each article you purchase—but makes every effort to satisfy your wants at the price you wish to pay. In short, this store is your helper in Xmas shopping—a courteous, reliable, serviceable friend whose assistance you can take freely and without after-remarks.

Last week's query: "Where in the Bible is mentioned

Genesis, Chapter 23, Verses 15, 16:
"My lord, hearken unto me: the land is worth four hundred shekels of silver; what is that between me and thee? But thy servant said unto Ephron:
And Abraham hearkened unto Ephron; and Abraham weighed to Ephron the silver, which he had named in the audience of the sons of Heth, four hundred shekels of silver, current money with the merchants."

cause of much of our trouble. Time will cure most of the evils, but we have no time to waste. Germany is liable to strike the decisive blow in the very near future.

The life that counts; just now, is the life that is willing to make every sacrifice necessary to save the country. The Rock County Council of Defense in perfecting a county-wide organization for raising funds for war purposes. Some plan will be adopted in a few days, and everybody will be asked to endorse it.

The money to be raised will doubtless be secured on an assessment basis on either property or incomes. It will be equitably distributed and will not be burdensome.

This money will go to the Red Cross, the Y. M. C. A., and other organizations devoted to welfare work in camp and at the front. Your boy and mine are the recipients, to large extent. Can we do less than respond cheerfully?

After spending only twice what they can afford instead of three times as much, many people feel so proud of their thrift that they then proceed to have a blow-out.

It is not likely that the Germans would fire on life boats containing healthy women and children, if there were any boat loads of invalids in range.

The people who have the money don't buy Christmas presents early because they haven't time, and the rest have time enough but no cash.

No wonder the Germans want to talk peace now, as their idea of war is to do the fighting at times when the other fellows aren't ready.

It is hardly fair to say that useless Christmas gifts are of no service, as they are successful in decorating the ash barrel.

By Edgar A. Guest.

THE WAITER AT CAMP SELFLEDGE.

The officers' friend is the waiter at camp.
And the night it was cold and was bitterly damp,
And they asked me to dine, which I readily did.
For at dining I've talents I never keep hid.

Then a bright-eyed young fellow came in with the meat
And straightway the troop of us started to eat.
I silently noticed that young fellow wait
At each officer's side 'til he'd filled up his plate.
I was startled a bit at the very first look
By the size of the helping each officer took.

And I thought as I sat there among them that night
Of the army's effect on a man's appetite.

The waiter at last brought the platter to me
And modestly proper I started to be.
A small piece of meat then I gracefully took.
The young fellow stood there and gave me a look.
"Better get all you want," he remarked to me then,
"I pass this way once, but I don't come again."

I turned in amazement. He nodded his head.
In a way that convinced me he meant what he said.
I knew from his manner and smile on his lip
That the rule in the army is "no second trip."
And I thought as he left me my food to attack,
Life gives us one chance, but it never comes back.

INTERURBAN CAR IN WRECK INJURES TEN

CAR LEAVES TRACK AT CORNER OF EASTERN AND BELOIT AVENUES SHORTLY AFTER TWELVE LAST NIGHT.

BRAKES FAIL TO HOLD

Mrs. Fred De Pold is Taken to Hospital.—Nine Others Receive Bad Cuts and Bruises.

Ten persons, occupants of the interurban car which left the track at the corner of Eastern and Beloit avenues shortly after twelve o'clock this morning, due to the failure of the brakes to hold on the slippery tracks, today lie at their homes or at the hospital, being attended for their injuries received in the wreck. The traveling party consisted of five men and three women passengers who received minor cuts and bruises, the motorman and conductor were seriously shaken up, but fared better than the others.

Fern Hull, an employee on the city street railway, had his shoulder dislocated and his head and face cut by flying glass. Joe Conley and Harvey Thompson, also employees on the city railway, returning from placing their cars in the bars, received internal injuries.

Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Brown and niece, Viola Desbrander, were not seriously injured, but were cut and bruised from the flying parts of the car. Many of the occupants, when the car came to a rest on its side, found themselves under the seats and masses of broken glass from the windows shattered by the impact of the car and the ground.

Dave Lower, motorman, and C. O. Board, conductor, both of whom had been on duty since the accident, were shaken up from the wreck. In speaking of the accident, Lower, the motorman, claims that the car was traveling at a fast speed and that he had attempted to put on the brakes but they refused to work, due to the slippery tracks caused by the snow gathering on them. Before he reached the curve and due to the speed, jumped the track and went on its wild path of destruction.

The car tore down two wire fences and flung them on its side in the field. All the electric wiring was torn loose and when the occupants began to extricate themselves only the street light aided them in getting out. When the car turned on its side, the seats and interior fixtures fell on the occupants.

A smoldering blaze broke out in the front of the car and threatened to spread. When the car was turned on its side, the fire spread. The men and women were helped to their safety and taken to their homes or to the hospital.

The car itself was a complete wreck with nothing left, but the frame work. One of the wheel trucks was left in the ditch in the flight of the car and the other was torn from its place just before the car overturned. Every window in the car was shattered, every electric light broken and although the car is intact, the furnishings and fixtures are a mass of kindling wood.

Service between Janesville and Rockford was in perfect order this morning. A special car was sent from Rockford, arriving here at a quarter to six, to care for the traffic in that direction. The wrecking crew was also sent, and immediately set to work to clear up the debris which was found broadcast over the field in which the car came to a halt.

SHEEP RAISING IS GIVEN AN IMPETUS THROUGHOUT COUNTY

Twenty-seven Boys and Ten Girls Receive Their Start in the Industry Today.

Drawing their numbers from a cap, twenty-seven boys and ten girls this noon became the owners of three well-bred ewes, the nucleus for the future sheep herds of Rock county. The fortunate owners gave the Commercial club their promissory notes for the animals and will care for them and work with them under the direction of six supervisors, who are expert sheep men and will give the youthful owners the best of their experience. The successful contestants were selected from a large number of applicants throughout the county, and the sheep, which were purchased by the Janesville Commercial club, are now being turned over to them for raising. These sheep are of a western variety and have been quartered at the Park association grounds for a month past.

The following are the teams and the supervisors who received sheep: Supervisor George Hull's team was composed of Grace Rye, Margaret Curtis, John P. Clark, Clayton Guernsey, and William Krueger, Supervisor J. C. Robinson's team: William Krapp, Fred Rechen, Donald Campbell, Lawrence Rosa and Alden Porter. Supervisor John Cooper's team: Irene Chango, Mary Doughty Doubleday, Irene Runn, Robert Iman and Cora May Van Aller. Supervisor Seth Crall's team: Arthur Winkler, Glen Beiser, Hugh Barrett, M. Buckhammer, Miss Davis, Earl Bader and Lawrence Daddie. John Clark's team: Francis Cunningham, Wilma Rainer, Will Monarue, Susie Burdick, Harold Hille and Donald Radick. Supervisor Ben Beck's team: Ben Radker, Ray Jones, Melvin Simonson, Ralph Schuman, Leo Bonamant and Luella Smiley.

There were nearly one hundred present at the luncheon which preceded the distribution of the sheep and talks were given by persons who have a thorough knowledge of the entire situation and their talks were most interesting and entertaining.

Following are the supervisors who spoke: John Beck of Orfordville; John Clark, Janesville; John Cooper of Clinton; Seth Crall of Evansville; George Hull of Whitewater and J. C. Robinson of Evansville.

Mr. Robinson was the first man called upon by Mr. Markham to speak and he gave an excellent report from the sound advice which he gave to the young contestants: "Young people are apt to put their sheep into a warm barn with the idea to keep them warm. This is the wrong thing to do. Cold does not harm the sheep any so long as they remain dry. The most essential things in sheep raising are fresh air and exercise. Do not feed these sheep any grain. The best feed for sheep is clover hay or alfalfa." He cautioned them against grain because many sheep are lost due to overfeeding. The other men held the very same opinion. Attorney Dougherty was called upon to speak. He said he was glad to help boys get out into the county and "help boys get rich growing sheep."

Polite.

"Sir," said the considerate stick-up man, as he reached for his victim's watch, "I sincerely trust you will pardon me for taking your time."

TO BEGIN THE TAX COLLECTION MONDAY

City Treasurer Will Be Ready to Receive Payments on Monday Morning—Last Day of Payment is Feb. 1.

Collection of the tax assessments for the coming year to cover the city and county budgets recently passed by the commissioners, will begin at the office of the city treasurer, George Muenchow, on Monday morning. During the past week, city officials have been devoting their time to the figuring of the amounts to be collected from the property owners.

At the same time that the property taxes are being collected the state income tax will also be received. The income tax this year in this city amounts to over fifty-seven thousand dollars. Of this sum $25,066.65 will come from corporations and $19,129.15 from individuals.

February 1 has been set as the last day when the tax assessments can be paid. After that time a charge of two per cent will be collected on all payments. The rate this year is $15.44 a thousand as compared with $15.12 of last year.

The budget passed by the city recently called for appropriations to the sum of $185,855.00 on the assessed valuation of the property in this city which was $4,759,321.00, an increase of over one hundred thousand dollars of the valuation in 1916.

News Notes from Movieland

BY DAISY DEAN

After an absence of two years, during which most of his time was spent in the motion picture business, Lou Tellegen has returned to the Broadway stage last week in a comedy drama called "Blind Youth". Tellegen himself is partly responsible for its success, though he has had the benefit of the collaboration of William Mack, also well known in the photographic world.

The story of "Blind Youth" revolves about a young French artist, played by Tellegen and the action takes place in Paris and New York. The cast includes Marie Chambers, Grace Carline, Tellegen's wife, Geraldine Farrar, is also in town, standing in the Metropolitan grand opera.

Viola Dana, who is now working in Los Angeles, proved to be a different person from scores of other noted actors who have gone west to do their motion picture work. At least she proved no different in the common desire to meet Charlie Chaplin. She was working at Charlie's former fun factory, and one day recently the comedian was visiting the place for business reasons. When Viola heard he was in the studio, she immediately rushed out of her character, huddled up Mr. Chaplin and began telling him of his old delirious.

In "A Modern Musketeer," which is to be Douglas Fairbanks' next picture, he is to play a soldier in the French army. The picture is to be made in Los Angeles and is to be roughly headed off. To make the picture realistic, he took on some regular passengers who were ignorant of the fact that moving pictures were being taken. When the picture started a hysterical woman jabbed a pin into his back, and he immediately did some acting which the director had not anticipated.

Edna Mackay has appeared in two pictures recently. The one after the other, she was featured in a Fox film under the name of "The Girl in the Red Dress," which is a standard release. Then came a totally different kind of part, under Scott Sidney in "Paradise of the Apes," which has

Syd Chaplin will live near Los Angeles in the beautiful home which fronts the five acres on which the Chaplin studios are being built. Manager John Jasper is camped on the same grounds and a motion picture camera records daily the extraordinary progress being made. Charlie Chaplin will probably continue to live at the Los Angeles Athletic Club. Every day the great little comedian visits the grounds and says: "Say isn't that studio done yet?"

"The Frozen Warning" is the title finally selected by the Commonwealth Pictures Corporation of Chicago in the latest recently conducted for the naming of the first film in which Charlotte, the skater, is to be starred. Winners are announced as Dan Watson of Niles, Ohio, and Bertha Backus of Providence, R. I.

Temperance Talks

(By Temperance Educational League) Supreme Court Settles Personal Liberty Issue.

The personal liberty argument so often used by the liquor interests received a jolt this week when the Supreme Court of the United States decided that the federal government has the right to prohibit the manufacture, sale or transportation of intoxicating liquors within its borders without violating the guarantees of the fourteenth amendment.

"We further think it clearly follows from our numerous decisions, upholding prohibition legislation, that the right to hold intoxicating liquors for personal use is not one of the fundamental privileges of a citizen guaranteed by the constitution. Society has the right to prohibit the use of intoxicating liquors. The opinion of the court is in part as follows:

"It must now be regarded as settled that on account of their well-known vicious qualities and the extraordinary evils shown by experience commonly to be consequent upon their use a state has power absolutely to

"Tee-hee," laughed the young girl, with a deep-dyed blush.

"Where do you live? May I see you home? What is your name?" he asked in quick succession somewhat hurriedly.

"Oh, no—er—yes, that is, perhaps," she stammered in maidenly confusion.

They had walked but a few squares when the girl suddenly stumbled over a bent pin and fell fainting into Theodore's arms.

Her weakness aroused his chivalry and also the faint down of love.

"Will you marry me? I have the biggest diamond ring in the city. I will have it made into a ring for you!"

"Oh no!" she protested. "I have a diamond!" and she, with surprising alacrity for one who had such a dangerous fall, hurried away.

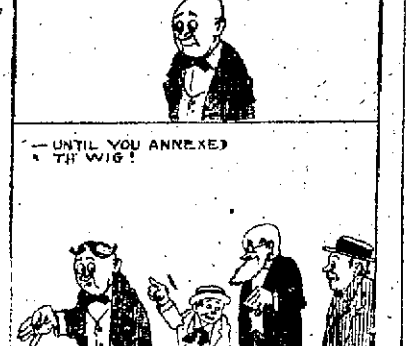

It wasn't until after he had been thinking of her for a half hour that he absent-mindedly let his hand fall on the empty place on his necktie.

By Jove. So she has!" he remarked, admiringly.

ASTRONOMER MAKES DISCOVERY OF NEW STARS IN HEAVENS

[BY ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

Berkely, Calif., Dec. 15.—Three new stars, which blazed up as a result of collisions or other disasters in two other far-distant spiral nebulae, and then within a few months dimmed their fires until they no longer could be detected by the most powerful telescopes—have been discovered by Heber D. Curtis of the Lick Observatory of the University of California.

His discovery that it is perhaps twenty million years since these catastrophes occurred, but vastly distant are the two spiral nebulae that only now has the light sent forth completely.

The special importance of the discovery is the evidence given in support of the belief that each of the spiral nebulae outside the Milky Way is in itself an enormous universe of stars, comparable in vastness to the Milky Way, in which is finding increased support among astronomers.

Especially significant is the fact that the three stars just discovered are in spiral nebulae and not in our own universe. Astronomer Curtis discovered the number of new stars discovered in spiral nebulae since only three had previously been recorded, although twenty-six new stars have been recorded in our own galaxy.

No human eye has seen the three stars—they were found by Dr. Curtis on stellar photographs. Recently he examined a photograph taken March 20, 1915, of the great brosey nebula, N. G. C. 4321, the Lick Observatory.

The subject of this photograph was the nebula known as N. G. C. 4327. On the plate he found the image of a star which did not show on a photograph of the same region taken two months earlier. Examination of a photograph taken a month later showed that this new star had grown fainter in the following month, but it was not detected until this year, and by that time long faded from possibility of observing or photographing.

The second new star in this same spiral nebula, Nova B, was photographed on March 2, 1914, but not detected until this year. Several photographs taken since April, 1915, reveal no trace of it.

The greatest value of the discoveries is the opportunity they have afforded Astronomer Curtis to strengthen his theory of the spiral nebulae. This theory is that each of the spiral nebulae is in itself a collection of stars at an almost unthinkable distance from our own universe.

THE BAR SINISTER

Since "Uncle Tom's Cabin" secured the conscience of the American public, there has been no such popular contribution to a broad understanding of the nation's most vital and difficult problem, as is presented by "The Bar Sinister."

Being the strange dramatic story of a girl who mistakenly thinks she has colored blood in her veins and therefore she turns to deny herself the love of a man who adores her, this powerful photo-play is a production of unique merit and remarkable interest. It treats a delicate subject compassionately yet boldly and is dedicated to a noble purpose.

Resume of Moving Picture Programs Of The Week

By Mrs. Abbie Helms.

A very enjoyable little play, which might well be called "A Comedy of Errors," was given at the Apollo the first part of the week. In it Madge Kennedy and her would-be bridegroom had many laughable and somewhat harrowing experiences before they were safely married. They were "Nearly Married" several times, which was chosen as the name of the play.

Miss Kennedy is a joyous, charming actress and kept the fun going fast and furious. The couple after they were married had to elope to get free from officious friends who tried to separate them by a divorce. One of the exciting scenes was when the bride went to her room in his auto and set the garage on fire. The play was given as a benefit to Co. M and was very successful.

On Wednesday "Iris" was given, with Miss Alma Taylor in the stellar role. In this play she was supposed to be a fashionable widow whose husband had left her a large fortune on condition that she did not marry again. She was a wealthy widow who had a young son and a young daughter. She was a very poor, all the time she is pursued by the wealthy lower and she finally goes to him. The general role of her and the play was about this time the real man comes back. The weekly letter had some good war pictures of the camps, with a plea for a Sammie's Christmas.

At the Apollo on Sunday was given a drama of South American revolutions in "Soldiers of the South." A young American girl was the heroine, who from a mistaken loyalty to her father, whom she believed had killed a man, was all the time playing into the hands of the enemy. The play was a very strong production, with a musical score given by the orchestra of the school. The story started with an invasion and capture of New York City by a foreign army. Harry Morey was the man of the hour who organized the defense of the nation to overthrow the invaders. Alice Joyce was his sweetheart, who, to help her country, pretended to be a foreign legionnaire. A young sister of Morey was supposed to be a young enthusiast for enlistment, as a second Joan of Arc. She was secretly kidnapped by the enemy and publicly shot in the street. The work of the men of ship building, and of drilling men is shown in detail, and the futile efforts of pacifists. It ends, of course, with the withdrawal of the hostile forces and the triumph of patriotism. It was a splendid production, well put on. A new star, Marjorie Rambeau, was seen in "Mary Moreland" on Thursday and Friday. It was an attractive little play and well given.

The Sunday play at the Beverly was "The Adopted Son." In this Francis Bushman took the part of a rough westerner, who when a young boy came to the outbreak of the war. He carried him home and was adopted by the family to avenge the death of his father. He was the southern girl of the family and she attends a county fair with the hero, where a contest for fancy shooting is held. The feud is finally ended by the hero who shows that he himself belongs to the taboored family. Billie Burke is her pretty and charming self in "Arms and the Girl." It is a story of how an American girl was stranded in Belgium at the outbreak of the war. Her passport stolen by a clever spy, she is unable to get away. Befriended by a young American engineer, he is captured by the German soldiers and is able to escape for his efforts in helping her. To save him, she declares that he is her fiancée, and the German general has her married at once. Various complications ensue, until the man, by bravery and cleverness, gets them out of the scrape and safely off to Europe.

An unsavory story of the war in the underworld of Paris was depicted in "The Brand of Satan." Montagu Love had the dual part of assassin and judge on the bench, while he was called upon to sentence his father for execution. The whole thing was unwholesome and entirely suggestive. It was entirely unwholesome. The play was usually sent out splendid productions.

MANY PEOPLE MARRY AS RESULT OF WAR

[BY ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

London, Dec. 15.—"Crudely stated the war has resulted in 200,000 people in the United Kingdom being married between August, 1914, and June, 1917, who in the ordinary course would not have married," says Sir Bernard Mallet, president of the Statistical Society.

The loss of potential lives to the belligerent countries by the decrease in number of children born was perhaps the most important effect upon vital statistics produced by the war.

Statistics produced by the United Kingdom had suffered far less than Germany and Hungary, the United Kingdom having lost 10,000 per cent million of the population, Germany 40,000 and Hungary 60,000 per million.

The infant mortality in the summer of 1917 appeared to have been very high in several German cities, and the German rate all through 1917 was at some 50 per cent higher than in England.

An alteration in the sex ratio of birth appeared to have been established by the figures of the United Kingdom, the proportion of males having noticeably increased. Contrary to expectations the war has produced no effect on the figures of illegitimate births.

THE YUKON TRAIL

A Tale of the North

By William MacLeod Raine

(Copyright by William MacLeod Raine)

"What is she going to do in Kusiak?" Agate the purser grinned. "What do they all do—the good-looking ones?" "Get married, you mean?"

"Surest thing you know. Girls coming up ask me what to bring by way of outfit. I used to make out a long list. Now I tell them to bring clothes enough for six weeks and their favorite wedding march."

"Is this girl engaged?" "Can't prove it by me," said the officer lightly. "But she'll never get out of Alaska a splinter—not that girl. She may be going in to teach, or to run a military store, or to keep books for a trading company. She'll stay to bring up kiddies of her own. They all do."

Three children came up the stairway, caught sight of Miss O'Neill, and raced pell-mell across the deck to her. The young woman's face was transformed. It was bubbling with tenderness, with gay and happy laughter. Clinging her arms wide, she waited for them. With incoherent cries of delight, they flung themselves upon her. The two oldest were girls. The youngest was a fat, cuddly little boy with dimples in his soft cheeks.

"I dived myself, Aunt Sheba. Didn't I, Gwen?" Sheba stooped and held him off to admire. "All by yourself—just think of that."

"We helped just the teeniest bit on the buttons," confessed Janet, the oldest of the small family. "And I tied his shoes," added Gwendolen, "after he had laced them."

Gwendolen snuggled close to Miss O'Neill. "You always smell so sweet and clean and violet, Aunt Sheba," she whispered in confidence.

"You're spoiling me, Gwen," laughed the young woman. "You've kissed the blarney stone. It's a good thing you're leaving the boat today."

Miss Gwen had one more confidence to make in the ear of her friend. "I wish you'd come too and be our new mamma," she begged.

A shell-pink tinge crept into the milky skin of the Irish girl. She was less sure of herself, more easily embarrassed, than the average American of her age and sex.

"Are your things gathered ready for packing, Janet?" she asked quietly. The purser gave information to Elliot. "They call her Aunt Sheba, but she's no relative of theirs. The kids are on their way in to their father, who is an engineer on one of the crooks back of Katma. Their mother died two months ago. Miss O'Neill met them first aboard the Skagit on the way up and she has mothered them ever since."

The eyes of Elliot rested on Miss

O'Neill. "She loves children." "She sure does—no bluff about that." An imp of mischief sparkled in the eye of the supercargo. "Not married yourself, are you, Mr. Elliot?"

"No." "Hmp!" "That was all he said, but Gordon felt the blood creep into his face. This annoyed him, so he added brusquely: "And not likely to be."

When the call for breakfast came Miss O'Neill took her retinue of youngsters with her to the dining room. Looking across from his seat at an adjoining table, Elliot could see her waiting upon them with a fine absorption in their needs.

Before they had been long in the dining room Macdonald came in carrying a sheaf of business papers. He glanced around, recognized Elliot, and made instantly for the seat across the table from him. On his face and head were many marks of the recent battle.

"Trade you a cauliflower ear for a pair of black eyes, Mr. Elliot," he laughed as he shook hands with the man whose name he had just learned from the purser.

The grip of his brown, muscular hand was strong. It was in character with the steady, cool eyes set deep beneath the jutting forehead, with the confident carriage of the deep, broad shoulders.

"You might throw in several other little souvenirs to boot and not miss them," suggested Elliot with a smile. Macdonald nodded indifferently. "I gave and I took, which was as it should be. But it's different with you, Mr. Elliot. This wasn't your row."

"I hadn't been in a good mix-up since I left college. It did me a lot of good." "Much obliged, anyhow." He turned his attention to a lady entering the dining room. "Mornin', Mrs. Selfridge. How's Wally?"

She threw up her hands in despair. "He's on his second bottle of liniment already. I expect those ruffians have ruined his singing voice. When I think of how close you both came to death last night—"

"I don't know about Wally, but I had no notion of dying, Mrs. Selfridge. They mugged us up a bit. That was all."

"But they meant to kill you, the cowards. And they almost did it too. Look at Wally—confined to his bed and speaking in a whisper. Look at you—a wreck, horribly beaten up, almost drowned. We must drive the villains out of the country or send them to prison."

"Am I a wreck?" the big Scotswoman wanted to know. "I feel as husky as a well-fed malamute."

"Oh, you talk. But we all know you—how brave and strong you are. That's why this outrage ought to be punished. What would Alaska do if anything happened to you?"

"I hadn't thought of that," admitted Macdonald. "The North would have to go out of business, I suppose. But you're right about one thing, Mrs. Selfridge. I'm brave and strong enough at the breakfast table. Steward, will you bring me a double order of these shirred eggs—and a small steak?"

"Well, I'm glad you can still joke," Mr. Macdonald, after such a terrible experience. All I can say is that I hope Wally isn't permanently injured." Mrs. Selfridge sighed and passed to her place.

The eyes of the big man twinkled. "Our little fracas has been a godsend to Mrs. Selfridge. Wally and I will both emerge as heroes of a desperate struggle. You won't even get a mention. But it's a pity about Wally's injuries—and his singing voice."

The younger man agreed with a gravity back of which his amusement was apparent. The share of Selfridge in the battle had been limited to leg work only, but this had not been good enough to keep him from being overhauled and having his throat squeezed.

Elliot finished breakfast and left Macdonald looking over a long type-written document. The paper was a report Selfridge had brought in to him from a clerk in the general land office. The big Canadian and the men he represented were dealing directly with the heads of the government departments, but they thought it the part of wisdom to keep in their employ subordinates in the capacity of secret service agents to spy upon the higher-ups.

CHAPTER III.

The Crevasse.

For an hour before the Hannah reached Katma Miss O'Neill was busy getting her little brood ready. Her heart was as tender as a Madonna to these lambs so ill fitted to face a frigid waste. Their mother had been a good woman. She could tell that. But she had no way of knowing what kind of man their father might be. When they said their sniffling good-bys at Katma she was suspiciously bright and merry. Soon the children were laughing again with her.

One glance at their father, who introduced himself to Miss O'Neill as John Husted, relieved her mind greatly. His spontaneous delight at seeing them again and his choking gratitude to her for having looked after them were evidence enough that this kind-eyed man meant to be both father and mother to his recovered little folks.

Her temporary family stood on the end of the wharf and called good-bys to the girl. When they turned away she went directly to her room.

Elliot was passing forward when Miss O'Neill opened her stateroom door to go in. The eyes of the young woman were blinded with tears and she was biting her lip to keep back the emotion that welled up. He knew she was very fond of the motherless children, but he guessed at an additional reason for her sobs. "She, too, was as untought as a child in the life of this frontier land. Whatever she found here—how much of hardship or happiness or grief or woe—she knew that she had left behind forever the safe harbor of quiet waters in which her life craft had always floated.

It came on to rain in the afternoon. Heavy clouds swept across from the mountains, and the sudden sky opened like a sluiceway. The Kuskak contingent, driven indoors, resorted to bridge. Miss O'Neill read, Gordon Elliot wrote letters, dangled over magazines, and lounged alternately in the ladies' parlor and the smoking room, where Macdonald, Strong, a hardware merchant from Fairbanks, and a pair of sour-dough miners had settled themselves to a poker game that was to last all night and well into the next day.

Of the two bridge tables all the players were old-timers except Mrs. Mallory. She had come in over the ice for the first time last winter. The other women felt that she was a bird of passage, that the frozen Arctic could be no more than a whim to her. They deferred a little to her because she knew the great world—New York, Vienna, London, Paris. Great names fell from her lips casually and carelessly. She was full of spicy little anecdotes about German royalty and the British aristocracy. It was no wonder, Gordon Elliot thought, that she had rather stunned the little social set of Kuskak.

Through Northrup and Trelawney a new slant on Macdonald was given to Gordon. He had fallen into casual town was instep deep. Many of the passengers hurried ashore to make the most of the five-hour stop. Elliot put on a pair of heavy boots and started uptown.

At the end of the wharf he passed Miss O'Neill. She wore no rubbers and she had come to a halt at the beginning of the mud. After a momentary indecision she returned slowly to the boat.

The young man walked up into the town, but ten minutes later he crossed the gangplank of the Hannah again with a package under his arm. Miss O'Neill was sitting on the forward deck, making a pretense to herself of reading.

He moved over to where she sat and lifted his hat. "I hope you won't think it a liberty, Miss O'Neill, but I've brought you some rubbers from a store uptown. I noticed you couldn't get ashore without them."

The girl was visibly embarrassed. She was not at all certain of the right thing to do. Where she had been brought up young men did not offer courtesies of this sort so informally.

"I think I won't need them, thank you. I've decided not to leave the boat," she answered shyly.

Elliot had never been accused of being a quitter. Having begun this, he proposed to see it out. He caught sight of the purser superintending the discharge of cargo and called to him by name. The officer joined them, a pad of paper and a pencil in his hand.

"Perhaps it does, madam. It is no doubt trying to set a good example to the passengers."

A police magistrate was disposing of a series of cases at a rapid rate and with great earnestness and dignity. "Then you are sure you recognize this handkerchief as the one stolen from you?" he asked the complainant.

"Yes, your worship," was the reply. "How do you know it was yours?" the justice demanded.

"You can see it is of a peculiar make, your worship," replied the witness. "That is the way I know it."

"Are you aware, sir," shouted the justice, drawing a similar one from his pocket, "that there are others like it?"

"Indeed, I am," replied the questioner one still more placidly. "I had two stolen."

A little girl went to the grocer's and asked the salesman if he had any fresh eggs.

"Yes," answered the man. "How many do you want?"

"She viewed the eggs critically. "Please, sir," she said, "these are not regular eggs."

"Certainly they are," she persisted. "I heard my papa tell mamma there's a corner on eggs, and these are all smooth."

"Did you try counting sheep for your insomnia?"

"Yes, but it only made matters worse—the sheep reminded me of butcher's bill."

Tales of the Friendly Forest

"What was that?" asked Timmy Chippmunk as he swallowed the cork. Billy Bunny was too frightened to answer. He let the glass bottle drop on the ground and stood still, looking wildly at the little chipmunk.

"The maple syrup was fine," said Timmy, "but what was that little hard lump I swallowed."

"Oh, please don't begin to swell up and bust!" cried Billy Bunny, at last finding his voice. "Mother says if you ever swallow a cork it will swell and swell inside you until you can't stand it any longer."

"What's that?" asked Timmy Chippmunk. "Did I swallow a cork?"

"Yes, you did," sobbed Billy Bunny. "And it's all my fault. I let it drop into your mouth by mistake. Of course you didn't see it. How could you, with your eyes shut?"

Timmy Chippmunk now began to get frightened. "You've murdered me, that's what you have done, Billy Bunny," he cried. "Oh, what shall I do?"

Just then who should come along but Dr. Heron. He had a very long bill and very long legs. All doctors have very long bills, otherwise it wouldn't pay to be a doctor. "What's the trouble?" he asked, opening his little black bag. "Anybody sick?"

"I'm going to be," cried Timmy Chippmunk. "Oh, dear Dr. Heron, don't let me die!"

"Stuff and nonsense. Don't talk like that," said the big bird doctor. "Show me your tongue."

"Can you see the cork?" asked Billy Bunny. Timmy Chippmunk was just going to ask the same question, only Dr. Heron had hold of his tongue, so he couldn't.

"See what?" asked Dr. Heron.

"What are you talking about?" "See the cork," said Billy Bunny again. "Timmy swallowed a cork and he'll swell up and bust in a few minutes. Oh, dear! Oh, dear! And it's all my fault!"

"Well, I do see something," said Dr. Heron, squinting down Timmy Chippmunk's throat. "My but it's an awful ways down." And Dr. Heron looked very serious; very serious and solemn.

"Now sit still and don't you sneeze. Open wider, if you please. Maybe I can pull it out."

If you do not smile or pout."

Then Dr. Heron stuck his long bill down Timmy's throat and pulled out the cork. "O joy!" cried the little chipmunk as the doctor let go of his tongue.

(And in the next story, if my Polly Parrot doesn't telephone it down to the editor before I do, I will tell you what happened to Billy Bunny.)

WHERE YOU LIVE DETERMINES WHICH YOUR RULER IS IN RUSSIA

OWN SOMETHING

BUILDING HUMAN EFFICIENCY

By P. G. HOLDEN.

THE manufacturer who would find the source of efficient workmanship must go outside the glare of his furnace fires. He must come into contact with the uplifting influences of the home.

Efficiency does not begin when the workman takes up his daily task, nor does it end when he lays it down.

The company's interest in its workmen follows them to their homes, since the form of amusement, entertainment, or diversion in which they engage when off duty determines, to a large extent, their degree of efficiency when they return to the shop.

The workman who does not own his home is inclined to be discontented, unreliable, and undependable.

The renter, as a rule, is not so efficient as is the home owner.

Those who live at boarding houses are the first to leave for other points when the mills are temporarily closed, and new men must be trained to fill their places when work is resumed.

The Pride of Ownership.

On the other hand, the workman who owns his home, who beautifies his grounds and raises a garden, develops a degree of efficiency not equaled under other conditions.

The pride of ownership acts as a stimulant and the home proves a magnet which attracts and holds him. The garden provides employment for otherwise idle hours, and the open air exercise enjoyed in cultivating the plants improves his health.

The products of the garden also play an important part in solving those economic questions upon which the contentment and peace of mind of the workman so often depends.

Approximately 40 per cent of the wages of workmen is expended for food, and the man who produces any portion of his food proportionately reduces his cost of living. This gives him an additional sum of money to add to his savings, improve his home or expend for recreation and pleasure.

The workman who owns his home and has a garden, and possibly a few chickens, is able to stand having idleness thrust upon him for a few weeks for the reason that he has no rent to pay and has much of his sustenance growing out of or living upon his own soil. Such a man is never found in the bread line.

Renter Not Self-Supporting.

But the renter and boarder is not so well fortified against temporary misfortune. When one of the big steel mills at Pittsburgh resumed operations after a brief shut-down, it was found that every employee who did not own his home had moved away.

"The expense to the company in breaking in new men to take their places," declared the manager, "was greater than would have been the amount paid the men if they had been kept on the pay roll during the period of suspension."

Good health, temperate habits, contentment—these are the three leading elements which make for efficiency. This is the declaration of corporations who have directed their efforts toward establishing real homes for their workmen and in promoting home and vacant lot gardening.

The Need of Divine Guidance

By REV. B. B. SUTCLIFFE
Of the Extension Department, Moody Bible Institute, Chicago.

TEXT—Then I proclaimed a fast: that we might afflict ourselves before God to seek of Him a right way.—Ezra 8:21.

Perhaps today as never before the Christian needs to be instructed by God as to the right way. There are three great reasons why divine guidance is needed.

1. Because of what we are by nature. First of all we are ignorant. It is unpopularity, but true that "is not in man that walketh to direct his steps." So said Jeremiah long years ago.

And history shows all too clearly that the way that seems right to a man ends in death and disaster. There is no way of knowing what will take place on the morrow or even within the next hour. An explorer or a tourist going into a strange unknown country will want guidance as to what lies before him. We take such care in securing all the information we can before starting into new territory. Many think it necessary to prepare for passing to the unknown land beyond the grave, but after all each new day brings such dangers and such opportunities that to be ready for them needs to have the feet guided into the right way.

Then by nature man is so self-willed and self-sufficient he needs a higher intelligence than his own to guide him. This is humiliating but again history tells the truth. Ever since Cain in his self-will chose the wrong way it has been true that "the way of a man is forward and strange," as the Proverb says. Moses knew something of this when he declared in his last word to the people in Deut. 32:29, "I know that after my death ye will utterly turn aside from the way and evil will befall you."

Again we are so prone to wander from the right way. As the prophet says, "All we like sheep have turned everyone to his own way." Like sheep we wander, go astray and without sense keep on going further and further astray.

II. Because of the Character of the Way Before Us.

It is a difficult way for the Christian in these times. Bogs and mire are on either side and the way daily grows narrower. The master himself warns us in Matt. 7:13, 14, that "wide is the gate and broad the way that leadeth to destruction, and strait is the gate and narrow the way which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." So difficult is the way before the Christian, beset by the snares, pitfalls and traps of Satan, and so strewn with the allurements and attractions of the world, that left to himself he would surely come to destruction. He needs always the guidance of the one who alone knows all the difficulties and how to pass them. Not only difficult, but dangerous is the way.

III. Because of What the Lord is as Guide.

He knows all the way that lies untried and unknown before the Christian's feet. He is omniscient. It was the Lord, not Moses, who led the people of Israel of old, and it is the Lord who would guide his people in safety today. A story is told of a little boy from which we all may learn. During a storm a mother sought to rescue a family of six children. As the water burst open the door of her home, she tied her baby on her shoulder and took a boy of six in her arms. To her fourteen-year-old daughter she said, "you must carry one child." "Which one," said the girl. The mother looked at the two, one of four, one of two, unable to choose. Ben, her boy of eleven, said, "Ma, I'll take the little one." "No, my boy, you can't." "I know I can't," said Ben, "but Jesus can." "The water is too deep for you," the dispirited mother said. "It's deep for me," answered the boy, "but Jesus is a rail man." They started, the mother calling to her children, but soon Ben ceased to answer. The mother and the others soon reached a place of safety. When the tide went down next day little Ben tramped to them and put his little charge into the mother's arms. Had he followed her the night before he would soon have been beyond his depth. But unconsciously he had turned aside and followed a bank that years before had marked a boundary. The water was to his waist, and a step or two on either side would have been fatal.

And he can keep the Christian in the way as well as pit him on it. He is the Almighty one. One day is no harder for him than another. Though there be days black with discouragement and foreboding and care, he knows it all and can keep within the narrow way that leads to life and light and joy. A story is told of an Alpine guide who put out his hand for a traveler to step up by. When the traveler hesitated the guide said, "this hand never lost a man." "To all who will listen our guide says, 'I will hold thy right hand saying, Fear thou not.'"

Pleasant Fields Of Holy Writ

THE INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

Fourth Quarter, Lesson XI. Nehemiah X:11-22, December 16, 1917. Golden Text: Remember the Sabbath-day to keep it holy. Exodus XX: 8.

NEHEMIAH ENFORCES THE LAW OF THE SABBATH.

Theorize as one pleases, the fact remains—the proneness of the heart to backslide. It was so in olden times. Nehemiah had built a wall around the remnant of Israel; the whole nation had gone down to the moorings' beach; and protested they would never turn to their former life. Yet a few months, years at best, during Nehemiah's absence, and they were all backslidden again.

Neglect of the Sabbath was the beginning of it. Attendance upon the temple service became more and more infrequent. The offerings deteriorated in quality—moldy bread and sick lambs—until the priests had to quit the temple from lack of support, and, going to the Levitical cities, begin to till the soil.

The case ended with the induction of Tobiah, the inveterate enemy of God and Israel, into the temple. As it had ceased to be used for sacred purposes, they fitted up a suite of rooms, and placed in it the images of their idols and wicked guests.

The next step on this down-grade was natural; namely, from the neglect of worship to the active desecration of the day. From the forsaken temple and altar they turned to manual labor on the Lord's-day.

That was a strange, sad sight, that greeted Nehemiah's eyes as he looked from the wall of Jerusalem on his first Sunday in the Holy City after his return. Could he believe his eyes? There, on yonder hillside, men were actually treading grapes in the stone press. In yonder field men were lading sheaves upon asses to bring them inside the walls to the threshing floors, and no shower was threatening either. Here at the gate, which once echoed to notes of praise, the chattering of buyers and sellers is heard.

Nehemiah does not temporize. He asks not, "What would be politic?" He does not propose a gradual reform. He cries: "God is governor of Israel! His word is law! The Sabbath is His day! The temple is His house!" He hustles Tobiah's furniture out of the temple in the same summary manner that Jesus did the tables of the money-changers and the seats of them that sold doves. On Friday, before sunset, he shuts the gates of the city. When the hucksters came, with their garden-truck and fish, they were astonished to find the gates closed. They set up their stands outside, however, hoping to entice the people to buy. If any were disposed to do so, the faithful servants of Nehemiah were on hand to prevent it. When the truck-sellers appeared a second Sabbath, the great reformer warned them. If they appeared again, he would lay the iron hand of the law upon them. The reformation was complete.

THE TEACHER'S LANTERN.

The Sabbath question much mooted in its legal phases in the last general assembly today in its final analysis a personal question. The door of the heart's temple must be shut at times against the flood of things called secular if the flame of devotion is to be kept alive on the altar. In point of fact the best preparation for duties wrongly named secular is in the period of devotion. Through the temple window one may get a new view of one's environment and life and of what he requires. There is a table in the church of today to which the Lord would not object. It is that at which one takes account of his spiritual liabilities and assets. There is a treasury in the temple of today where one can cash a draft of prayer, augment his spiritual resources and go forth to meet his moral creditors with confidence.

Nehemiah "contended with the nobles." There is an exemplary power incidentally to high position. It cannot be avoided. Those who possess it cannot rid themselves of it or shun its responsibility. In this instance it was in the power of the nobles to cure the current evil. At all events they were not guiltless until they had cast the full weight of their example against the flagrant sin.

Nehemiah "adventured everything for God." To stem the current of the people's custom and pleasure required the courage of the field of valor. Nehemiah was not found wanting in the emergency.

This was not just a wordy contention for a matter of mere ceremonial observance. The infraction of the Sabbath was likely to unsettle the whole fabric of worship and service. It honey-combed the foundation. Nehemiah rescued the whole system.

The Sabbath question is two thousand years old if not six thousand. Some smart folk would have us think it is a problem incident to the progress of the twentieth century. They betray ignorance of the historic booklet of Nehemiah.

Nehemiah attacked the evil at once and in its highest seat. He faced the self-indulgent nobles of Judah with the charge of profaning the Lord's day. He cited them to an historical parallel, always an effective method. "Did not your fathers do the same thing? Did not their course bring about the evils which fell lately upon us and on our fathers?"

city? What folly to increase the penalties by following the same practices!" The attitude of Jesus toward the Sabbath is highly significant. He evidently followed his course deliberately, knowing that it would be the exemplary rule of his disciples. While he broke the traditions of men he kept the commandment of God. Of set purpose he crushed the hollow bubbles men had strung upon the golden thread of the Sabbath, but he never broke the thread itself.

Longfellow calls the Sabbath the golden clasp binding the volume of the week together.

Thirty-eight times in the Gospels Jesus is described as going to temple or synagogue. It was his custom. Phillips Brooks cleverly paraphrases the commandment, "Remember the Sabbath day and it will keep you holy."

CHRIST OUR PEACE: NATIONAL IDEALS: PEACE OR WAR? WHICH?

The title of Jean de Bloch's book, "Future of War," is paradoxical, for his conclusion is that war has no future. He argues (and that twenty years ago) with scientific accuracy and wealth of fact that the engineering of war has been so perfected that any appeal to arms must result in stale mate or an equivocal outcome, the prodigious cost of which would preclude its ever being named as a victory. It is the consummate crime of all history that in spite of this irrefutable argument the whole world has been involved in war. It is no de voutly hoped that now the truth of de Bloch's thesis having been demonstrated, at almost infinite cost, the folly of an appeal to arms may never again be repeated.

ART LEAGUE FREE OF ALL INDEBTEDNESS

The Meeting of the Art League Friday Afternoon Proved to Be Most Entertaining.

The debt against the Art League paid off an hour ago. The treasurer's report was the joyful news given to that society by the treasurer at the meeting held in the library on yesterday afternoon. The new receipts made on the sale and sale of last week was about $73, which liquidated the debt against the club. At the business meeting, one new member was taken in, Mrs. Geo. Paris. The leader for the program of the afternoon was Mrs. Nuzum, who read an article on "Chicago Beautiful," in which the plan of beautifying Michigan avenue, the Twelfth street Parkway and the new Union Station which is being built was discussed. The fine exhibits of pictures held in the galleries was also mentioned and the fact spoken of that the new view in the Carson Pirie Store a collection of 27 pictures by a noted artist, Louis Granger. The beautiful decorations in the Congress Hotel were also mentioned and a noted artist is now at work on it. The past in of the noted portrait painter, James Carol Beechwith, who died in New York about a fortnight ago, was noted. The Society of Etchers of Chicago had sent several hundred postcards to our soldiers in France. She also said that is open every day free of charge to the soldiers and sailors of the country. The city of Eau Claire is favored by a valuable gift of a collection of pictures was also noted. A description of a unique art gallery and museum at Santa Fe, which was dedicated on Nov. 26, was read by Mrs. Pember. Its architecture combines the mission with the early Indian and is very effective in housing the many relics of the cliff dwellers and other Indians, and also in displaying the arts and crafts of similar people. There is also a collection of the modern paintings made by artists working in the neighborhood. The death of the artist, Arthur Hale, and the many war posters now being produced by artists was also mentioned. A description of the new art gallery to be erected in Golden Gate Park, at San Francisco, was read, and a statue of Robert Emmet which is to be installed in the capitol at Washington next spring was noted. The next meeting of the club will be a social held on January 4th.

GENERAL GURKO EXILED BECAUSE OF STATEMENTS

Petrograd, Dec. 15.—The letter to the former Emperor Nicholas of Russia, which led to the exiling of General Gurko, formerly commander of the Russian southwest front, has just been published here. Its chief offense lay in the fact that General Gurko expressed the belief that Russia, after a trial of the evils of democracy, will "once more turn towards its lawful monarch and God's Anointed."

HOLLAND PLANS BUILDING THREE NEW SUBMARINES

The Hague, Netherlands, Dec. 15.—The Navy Estimates of the Netherlands for 1918 provide for the building of three submarines and a mine-layer for the mother country and three submarines for the Netherlands East Indies. A number of submarines are already under construction. The refusal of the United States to sanction the building of three such boats at San Francisco on Holland's account makes the carrying out of the modest program very problematical at present.

According to a letter received from Miss Henrietta Roelofs, a Y. M. C. A. secretary in France, French women are to be trained for the ministry; so that they may have the right to perform the sacraments in districts where there are no men.

NEUTRAL COUNTRIES MAKE PEACE MOVES

[BY ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

Berlin, Dec. 15.—The German government received through a neutral government last September an inquiry in regard to its war aims under such circumstances as to indicate that the inquiry was made with the sanction of the British government, says an official announcement issued here today.

The announcement was in reply to the statement of the British foreign secretary, A. J. Balfour, in the House of Commons on Tuesday that Great Britain in September had received through a neutral diplomatic channel a communication to the effect that Germany would be glad to get into touch with Great Britain in regard to peace. The statement says the inquiry was made under which the inquiry was made allowed the conclusion to be drawn that the British cabinet had been informed of this step and that it had been sanctioned by at least the most important of its allies, and adds: "The German government was ready in principle to answer the inquiry and to do this two courses were open—an indirect or direct reply."

The decisive objection against an indirect reply to the medium of the neutral power was that any one-sided presentation of the German attitude, even to a neutral mediator, might constitute a one-sided restriction of German policy without any guarantee in regard to the opponent's attitude. That being so, a direct verbal reply through the intermediary appeared to be the most opportune course to follow.

The trend of subsequent events, however, forced the conviction on the German government that on the part of our opponents nothing was being done to facilitate such direct reply to the inquiry.

Regarding the utterance of Great Britain mentioned by Foreign Secretary Balfour about its readiness to receive any communication from the German government, the news of this reached the German government only in Mr. Balfour's statement to the House of Commons. A further step in the German side was not made on the German side.

MAKE IT A RED CROSS CHRISTMAS

Translating the Christmas Spirit into Service

FIFTEEN MILLION MEMBERS BY CHRISTMAS EVE

On every side, from now until Christmas, we are going to see and hear the slogan, "Make it a Red Cross Christmas!" On every side we are going to be asked to enlist in the Christmas campaign drive for 10,000,000 new members of the American Red Cross. And every member is asked to place a lighted candle in a window of his home on Christmas Eve, shining through a Red Cross Service Flag on the window-pane. This will be of minor, with one large Red Cross (five inches square), and one small one for each member of the household who is also a member of the Red Cross.

By MARIAN BONSALE DAVIS.

THE war lays its hand upon us this Christmas.

The chiming carols may seem almost lost amid the blasting of the guns. The candles in the windows of our homes will shed their little beams into a world brilliant with liquid flame. We will celebrate Christ's birthday singing "... and on earth peace, good-will toward men," while we urge our sons to train their minds and their bodies for the killing of their brothers. But the Red Cross has taught those of us who have suffered, to see double: and it will be a Red Cross Christmas this year, wherever Americans are grouped together.

This is what I mean by seeing double: there are over 5,000,000 members of the American Red Cross and the campaign drive now opening should result in over 15,000,000. That doesn't seem big, for we have become used to larger figures. But the woman off in some lonely place, far from the inspiration of her Chapter, making with her work-worn hands things to keep our soldiers and sailors warm, the dressings that will help the healing of some wounds—that one woman seems great. She is the spirit of the Red Cross.

The War Fund of $100,000,000, generous as it was, has a way of turning round and seeming small. Twice that sum was spent in this country last year for candy. We have learned to talk and think in billions. But one cent can buy enough iodine to disinfect a wound—and the disinfection of that wound may save a human life.

And, after experience with the wounded, there comes the time when one sees in the horror of the shattered flesh, the beauty of the spirit.

IT is a strange holiday for us Americans, with our new excitements and our new emotions; our new soldiers in cantonments or foreign trenches, and our new sailors on mined seas; reports of our first dead, and our letters from the front; our fears and our elations; and the occasional flash of vision of hundreds of thousands of boys and men in khaki in miles upon miles of army barracks.

Many of them, too, are aching with new tenderness.

It is the time of times, in our new puzzlement and need, to sing the Christmas carols of glad prophecy. The city chimes and village organs, singers going from door to door, will chime and peal and carol as they never have before, the Christmas message of good tidings and great joy which shall be to all people.

We owe it to our men to sing it with full hearts, so that the spirit of it will reach their battleships and their camps. They must never forget the happiness of this Christmas, the last, doubtless, before they go across to offer—all they have.

The Red Cross is trying, and expects to send every man in training a Christmas parcel of Christmasy things as a symbol to show him how much we care, and the things we cannot say in words. The boys in their barracks will be celebrating, swapping presents, joking and singing, adding a Christmas song to the familiar round of swinging choruses. But before another Christmas perhaps a million more young soldiers will have followed them overseas.

SOME of them, until the day they put on the uniform, knew only school fun and home love. Their stockings were darned, their favorite things to eat were cooked, every minute of their holidays planned, their young hopes regarded with yearning eagerness by their families. Some of them were born seemingly to be knocked around, and have the hard and lonely end of things. Both are going abroad together now, serving the colors, defending our lives with the offer of their own.

There will be a day when one of these boys will be hurt. Suddenly his strong young body will be quite helpless. He will be far away in a dif-

President Wilson's Red Cross Christmas Proclamation

THE WHITE HOUSE, Washington.

TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES:

TEN MILLION Americans are invited to join the American Red Cross during the week ending with Christmas Eve. The times require that every branch of our great national effort shall be loyally upheld and it is peculiarly fitting that at the Christmas Season the Red Cross should be the branch through which your willingness to help is expressed.

You should join the American Red Cross because it alone can carry the pledges of Christmas good-will to those who are bearing for us the real burdens of the world war both in our own Army and Navy and in the nations upon whose territory the issues of the world are being fought out. Your evidence of faith in this work is necessary for their heartening and cheer!

You should join the Red Cross because this arm of the National Service is steadily and efficiently maintaining its overseas relief in every suffering land, administering our millions wisely and well, and awakening the gratitude of every people.

Our consciences will not let us enjoy the Christmas Season if this pledge of support to our cause and the world's weal is left unfulfilled. Red Cross membership is the Christmas spirit in terms of action.

(Signed) WOODROW WILSON,

ferent country, where they do not speak his language, and no one of home will be around him. But if we will have done our duty—his eyes will see a Red Cross. It may be on the arm of a surgeon and a nurse. It may be on the flag waving over the hospital that can save his life.

To put it there—to send the Red Cross to Europe—that is making it a Red Cross Christmas.

Our hands will tremble when we place our Red Cross candle in the window on Christmas Eve. And as we start the flame glowing through the cross, it will come to us anew that the Red Cross message and the Christmas message are the same.

WHILE they flicker, while the carolers sing and the chiming peal, somewhere in Europe they will be bringing in the wounded.

A train, with the Red Cross painted on the coaches, will be pulling into some railroad station. Motor ambulances in long lines with the sign of the Red Cross will be waiting for their human burdens. Men and women with skillful hands and the right to wear the Red Cross brassara will be ready for the stretchers.

As we stand here the stretchers are carried past us in a slow procession. It is just a sprinkling, just a thimbleful of the day's harvest of wounded—only two or three hundred. Yet the procession seems so long—it seems so unendingly long. The faces are like the faces of our men at home—here like our father—here like the man who lives across the street—and here a slender boy whose eyes we think we cannot stand to see.

It is all so quiet as the stretchers file by. The French officer of high rank with many medals, the peasant, the man who used to collect the garbage, the black man from Africa who does not know why he is called from home to give his life, pass by without a moan. Some are blind. Some will die. All are grievously hurt.

Perhaps it is the presence of God there where so many men are close to death that makes the old scales drop from our eyes. For among these mutilated that is what happens to us—the old values, the old conventions drop away forever. Each crushed or broken body becomes so infinitely precious, as we see it dominated by spirit. This black man, this blind boy have lifted us up. With a new sense we know that the things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are eternal.

And lifting up our eyes from the stretchers, we see the Red Cross. We see it on the arm of the surgeon, giving his skill. On the arm of the nurse, giving her youth. On the insignia of the ambulance men, giving their careers. We know that it was painted on the cases carrying these surgical supplies and these healing drugs. We know that it will wave above the hospital to which these men are going to have their chance of life.

From this minute the Red Cross becomes a part of us, and we become part of the Red Cross.

WHILE we do our Christmas shopping this year, while we live these days of new exhilaration—these thrilling days that are like draughts of the richest wine of life—now, before we suffer, Red Crosses will seem to be everywhere. In the stores among the gleaming fabrics and the gifts for soldiers, among the pretty toys on the Christmas trees, in railroad stations, in factories, in theatres, in markets, in churches, in settlements, in homes, in schools, in the streets there will be hundreds and hundreds of Red Crosses. Everywhere there will be picturesque booths, with someone in uniform, smiling and happy, asking for new members. And it will all seem like some wonderful, beautiful game.

Let us take all the strength and inspiration that it gives us. Truly it is beautiful and it is wonderful—so much of these things that it will make many men and women see double: see with the eyes of the spirit the Red Cross on the battlefield, on a brassard that is stained with precious blood.

The campaign drive for 10,000,000 members will be on! But it won't seem large! Yet one new member has potentials of service beyond any computation.

THEATRES will be crowded, and the gaiety, when it is not cruel, will help to make the world go round; so many men in uniform and beautifully dressed women, the orchestra playing "The Star Spangled Banner," patriotism beating high!

But we know it is a changed world. There is something sinister in the war-tax at the box-office. Underneath the laughing there is choking. In France, boys are going over the top; and through the strains of "The Star Spangled Banner" there seem to echo the words of the French officer spoken over the graves of the soldiers killed in the first American engagement in France, in November of this year:

We will, therefore, ask that the mortal remains of these young men be left here, left with us forever. We will inscribe on their tombs: "Here lie the first soldiers of the Republic of the United States to fall on the soil of France in the cause of Liberty and Justice." The passer-by will stop and uncover his head; travelers and men of heart will go out of their way to come here, and pay their respective tributes.

Private Enright!
Private Gresham!
Private Hay!

IN THE NAME OF FRANCE
I THANK YOU.

God receive your Souls!
Farewell!

There is a mother who works in her home and her church for the Red Cross who said that the highest points of her life, and her deepest happiness were the times her son, a new young second lieutenant home on furlough, talked with her as they washed the dishes together at the kitchen sink.

How it is these humble things, and not the dramatic ones, that bind us together and thrill us now! How to those whom the war has touched, people are not so much Generals or Colonels, or Presidents or servants or ice-men or tailors or scrubwomen or Kings, as fellow-human-beings; and how the hope of carrying on what thousands of radiant youths have died and are to die for, centers upon the little children.

THIS is thinking in Red Cross ways. For the ideal of the Red Cross Treaty signed in Geneva by the delegates of nations, is merely this: that every suffering human being in war, whether belonging to friend or enemy, shall be sacred to the Red Cross. Yet the symbol of that treaty is so great, that it is the meeting-ground of the most conflicting race, and the most conflicting creeds; of men and women and children; of black and white and yellow and red; of rich and poor; of Jew and Gentile; of Catholic and Protestant; of Buddhist and Confucian; of artist and artisan; of materialist and idealist; of soldier and civilian; of general and private; of foe and adversary—the Red Cross!

So we put candles in our windows this Christmas Eve, that the flickering point of light shining through the Red Cross on the window-pane may say to the wayfarer and the soldier and the sailor, things too great for words. They will understand. For in this overwhelming trouble we have begun to be simple of heart together. The poor and the rich have begun to understand the other's sacrifices.

And so we can sing Christmas carols and not be hypocrites; for the guns that are killing men so anguishingly dear to us are blasting out old wrongs and old hypocrisies.

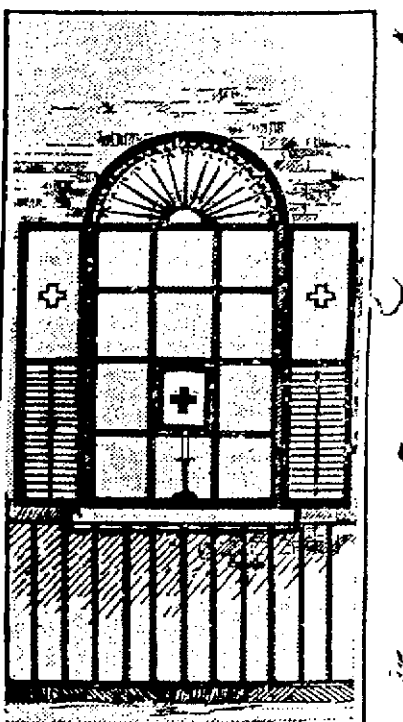

The Red Cross is our home way to help. The need is too great for us to compass even in our minds. The organization of the American Red Cross can do the things we cannot do ourselves—it can arrange the shipping, and carry our gifts, it can get them to our men. It can, if we let it, look after our men's little children left at home.

If you are not a member of the Red Cross, you are needed by your imagination.

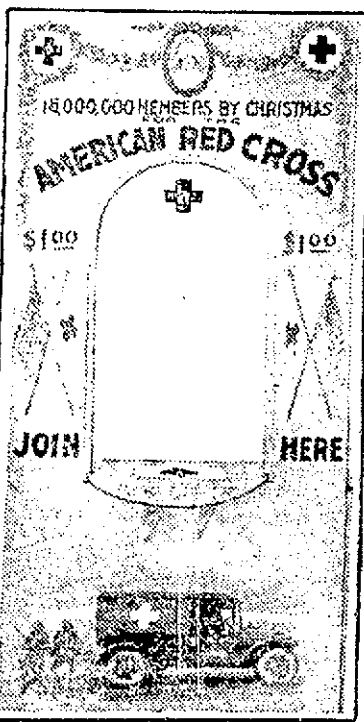

Please help—because you are so needed.

To get the Red Cross to our boys and our men—

This is a Red Cross Christmas!

MILLIONS OF WINDOWS, ON CHRISTMAS EVE, WILL DISPLAY THIS SYMBOL OF LOYALTY TO THE RED CROSS IDEA. EVERY MEMBER IS ASKED TO SHOW IT, WITH A LIGHTED CANDLE SHINING THROUGH.

BOOTHS LIKE THIS ALL OVER THE UNITED STATES, WILL MAKE IT EASY AND CONVENIENT TO JOIN THE RED CROSS BEFORE CHRISTMAS EVE. THERE WILL BE ONE WAITING FOR YOU.
